[BLEEP]

Female Narrator:	Part One. Passage One.
Pat: (female)	[upset] David, this is the worst hotel we've ever stayed in!
David: (male)	It's better than the last hotel in London.
Pat:	Well, I'm going to complain to the receptionist! The wardrobe door's broken and there aren't any towels in the bathroom!
David:	We can ask for some towels, Pat.
Pat:	Yes, but the bathroom isn't clean, David – you must be able to see that! And the lock on the window's broken! Ask the receptionist if we can change rooms.
David:	I remember the receptionist said the hotel was full so we can't ask to change.
Pat:	Well, then I want to go to another hotel now! [stress] Tell the receptionist we want all our money refunded.
David:	I don't think we'll be able to find another hotel now. It's very late, so we'll have to stay here tonight.
Pat:	Well, I'm not staying here tomorrow. [stress] We must [stress] find another hotel.

Reese: (male) Hi, Olivia! How was the first day in your new class?

Olivia: (female) Oh, Reese. I didn't enjoy it at all. I didn't know anyone.

Reese: Don't worry – you'll soon make friends.

Olivia: But everyone seemed so unfriendly. No one spoke to me at all.

Reese: So what did you like?

Olivia: Well, the class is very small. There aren't many other students. My old class was so big I couldn't hear the teacher sometimes.

Reese: What're your teachers like in your new class? Are they okay?

Olivia: Well, Miss Davis seems very nice. She's a young teacher and very trendy, but Mr Brown's very old. I don't like him.

Reese: You'll get used to him. My brother told me he's a good teacher.

Olivia: Well, I hope you're right, Reese. I'll try my best to like him and to get on with everyone.

Sally: (female) It's such a difficult situation, Andy. I really think we should stay with my [stress] parents this year. After all, we went to your [stress] family last year.

Andy: (male) I know, but Christmas is such a special time for my mother. She'll be so upset if we don't go.

Sally: [a little annoyed] Well, you'll just have to explain the situation to her. It's not fair if we always stay with your family, is it?

Andy: Well, I was thinking, perhaps we could do things differently this year. Why can't we stay with both [stress] our families? We could go to one family for Christmas and the other for New Year.

Sally: Mmm...I like that idea, although I'm not sure your mother will agree.

Andy: Leave her to me, Sally. I'll convince her it's a good idea.

Travel Agent: (male) Good morning. This is Far and Away Travel Agents. How can I help you today?

Customer: (female) Hello. I'd like to book a city break to Berlin please. I saw the details on the internet last week, but my computer's broken, so I can't book online.

Travel Agent: No problem. Do you want to book the weekend break or the mid-week break? The mid-week break is from Tuesday to Friday.

Customer: The mid-week break. I'd like to go in July, please.

Travel Agent: Let's see... unfortunately all places are booked on that trip.

Customer: Oh no! I can't go any other time.

Travel Agent: It's much cheaper to go on holiday in the middle of the week than at the weekend, you see. That's why mid-week holidays always sell out very quickly. You need to book earlier.

Customer: I'm really [stress] disappointed! Can you suggest anything else?

Travel Agent: Well, Paris is very nice in July. Let's see what's available...

Frank: (male) Hi, Carla! Are you looking forward to meeting your cousin again?

Carla: (female) Well, I feel quite nervous about it, Frank.

Frank: Oh, why?

Carla: I haven't seen him for about fifteen years. I remember he wasn't very nice when we were younger. I hope he's changed since then.

Frank: [laughs] What did he used to do?

Carla: Oh, pull my hair, call me names and tell lies about me. That kind of thing.

Frank: I'm sure he won't do that now! Where are you meeting him?

Carla: I suggested going for lunch but he's chosen a very expensive restaurant. I hope he offers to pay because I can't afford to eat there.

Frank: Oh no! Let's hope he does.

Carla: My mother wanted to come but I thought it was best to meet him alone the first time. Mum's very nosy and she'll ask him all sorts of questions. I'll feel awful if she embarrasses him.

Frank: I'm sure he'll be very nice and you'll enjoy meeting up again.

Carla: Hope so. I'll let you know, Frank.

Jill: (young girl) Grandad, I'm really excited! Dad's going to buy me a new mobile phone for my thirteenth birthday. He says I can have the latest model!

Grandad: (male) You're very lucky, Jill. When I was your age, we didn't even have a telephone. [stress]

Jill: Really, Grandad?

Grandad: Yes, life was very different. We didn't have mobile phones, computers or the internet.

Jill: Yes, we learnt about that at school.

Grandad: In fact, I didn't even watch television until I was about seventeen. My parents couldn't afford to buy one.

Jill: [sympathetically] Oh, Grandad!

Grandad: I got my first telephone at home after I'd married your grandmother.

Jill: Don't worry, Grandad. When I get my new mobile, I'll give you my old one. Then I can phone you every day.

Grandad: [laughs] Thank you, Jill! I've never had a mobile phone before!

Graham: (male) [sarcastically] Oh, I'm so excited.

Susie: Don't be like that, Graham! I thought we could take the children.

Graham: But Susie, I wanted to go on holiday then. We talked about going to France because I'm off work, remember?

Susie: Yes, I remember, but I'm sure the children would love to see the Queen. Jenny's been learning all about the royal family at school. We could take lots of photos!

Graham: I think it's you [stress] who wants to see the Queen, not Jenny!

Susie: I think it'll be a lovely day out for all [stress] of us and...well... I've already promised the children we'll go, so you'll have to come.

Alex: (male) I've lost the medicine the doctor gave me.

Lauren: Well, you sometimes leave things in the car.

Alex: It's not there, Lauren. I've looked and anyway, I walked to the doctor's yesterday.

Lauren: You could phone and ask for some more medicine.

Alex: But I'd have to pay for another prescription. And I really don't want to walk to the doctor's again. No, I'll just keep looking – it must be here somewhere.

Lauren: Didn't you have a bag with you when you came back from the doctor's?

Alex: Yes, but I've already looked in the bag. Maybe I left it next to my glasses. I was wearing them when I read the instructions on the bottle. My glasses are in the kitchen, so the medicine must be there.

Lauren: Well, go and get it then!

Alan: (male) Oh, not very interesting, really. How is everything at home?

Paula: Okay. I'm just wondering when you'll be home tomorrow? Will you be back for lunch? Your flight leaves in the morning, doesn't it?

Alan: Yes, it does, but I'm not sure when I'll get home, Paula. It could be in the afternoon or even in the evening. There are delays at the airport because of bad weather here in Sweden, so I can't say exactly.

Paula: [a little irritated] Well, I need to know when to expect you home, Alan. I've got to go shopping tomorrow with my mother and I've to cook dinner as well.

Alan: Okay, well don't worry about dinner. Let's go out to a restaurant instead. Then you can go shopping and see your mother when you like.

[BLEEP]

Female Voice:

Balloons have been popular for centuries. The earliest balloons were made from parts of animals and can be seen in very old pictures painted a long time ago. Nowadays, balloons are made from plastics and filled with gases, such as helium, to make them rise into the air.

Balloons have been used in many ways, for example, in medicine, in science and in art. They were also used as flying machines before aeroplanes were invented. A very big balloon made of special material was filled with a large amount of hot air. The air was heated by a flame underneath and a large basket was attached to carry passengers. This form of transport became known as a hot-air balloon. The first passengers travelled in a hot-air balloon in 1783. The following year, in June 1784, the second hot-air balloon flight was named after the French Queen. It took off in front of the Kings of France and Sweden and travelled 52 kilometres in forty-five minutes. This flight was much faster than the first, but ended early because of bad weather.

In the 1950s, an American inventor redesigned the balloon and hot-air ballooning has become a popular sport since then. Hot-air balloon rides have become tourist attractions and there are even festivals to celebrate them. The largest European festival is in Bristol, England. It lasts for four days and is regularly attended by around half a million people each year.

Balloons have also been used to help countries fight wars. In China almost 1,000 years ago, a type of paper balloon called a sky lantern was used by the army to send messages into the air. These lanterns are still popular at festivals today. However, they can be dangerous to flying aeroplanes and the environment. In fact, in Germany, Austria and some parts of China, people cannot send sky lanterns into the air for these reasons. In other countries, sending sky lanterns is a popular way to celebrate important events and will probably remain so for many years to come.
